- Painstakingly restored archive footage, music videos, concert clips, and candid photographs are combined with new interviews and more than 40 original songs — culminating in one final gig, the band's 30th anniversary Halloween concert.

- 34 minutes of video Bonus Features include restored music videos, complete concert songs, and interview outtakes.

- Director Timothy Gassen earned the nickname "The Guru of Garage" — he's written books and hundreds of feature articles on garage music, hosted his own garage rock radio show, and produced dozens of garage and psychedelic records.

Kids in the 1960s made music for the best reason — because they loved it. That sound was called "garage music."

The garage music underground exploded again in the 1980s, and one band — The Marshmallow Overcoat — spread the fuzz and psychedelia from their Tucson, Arizona home for the next three decades.

Their improbable paisley-punk journey — and the hopes and struggles of thousands of other bands just like them — are revealed in All You Need Is Fuzz : 30 years in a garage band, the feature documentary by director and renowned garage-music expert Timothy Gassen.

"Most people probably think there are only a couple dozen rock bands out there, all playing in stadiums for a million dollars a night," Gassen jokes. "But thousands of garage bands continue to play, every day and night, all over the world, just to keep rock and roll alive."

And while record sales for The Marshmallow Overcoat won't get confused with those of The Beatles, the Tucson band did manage international tours, global TV exposure, college radio hits, and more than 30 records released in the USA and Europe.

The band's amazing three-decade crusade, made on a perpetual shoestring budget, cemented The Marshmallow Overcoat as one of the longest-running garage bands in the history of rock & roll.

This feature-length HD documentary gives a rare and intimate insider's glimpse into how a no-budget rock band rehearses, makes records, climbs in a van to take their show on the road — and then survives decades of changing musical trends, commercial resistance — and each other.

All You Need Is Fuzz : 30 years in a garage band is for anyone who ever dreamed of being in a band ...

... and those who survived that dream.
